SUMMARY

On July 30th, 1983, Iraqi security and military forces surrounded the Qushtapa and Diyana camps near Arbil and rounded up some 8,000 Barzani Kurds between the ages of 12 and 80. They were forced into large convoys of military trucks and taken to Baghdad.

Have they been deported, imprisoned, tortured or massacred? No one knows.

The helpless families of these Barzanis, the Kurdish people and, indeed, men and women of conscience throughout the world, have the right to know of the fate of these defenceless human beings.

REPORT

THE MISSING EIGHT THOUSAND KURDS

For more than six decades Southern Kurdistan has been suffering from the misrule of the Iraqi state. a state arbitrarily imposed, politically incompetent, historically and culturally lacking legitimacy. Neither the forcible appendage of Southern Kurdistan (Wilayat of Mosul) to the new entity, nor the advent of republican era have given any tangible evidence of viability and order in that country . The creation of a stable political system and a cohesive social order , which were lacking even by 1958, became even more difficult after the July 14 revolution. Iraq's history of the last 29 years can therefore be seen as nothing more than a series of coups and counter-coups some installing, others overthrowing regimes which were either military dictatorships or short-lived civilian or aggressively racist. Amidst these recurring upheavals Iraq's heterogeneity has continued to have a decisive effect on the political and social life of the country. This diversity of self-conscious cultural units -which even from Iraq's inception as a state had complicated the task of creating an integrated loyalty to the territorial state - has been consistently ignored through the steady promotion of the Arab identity of the state and the parallel and systematic suppression of the Kurdish national identity. The subsequent result of all this has been Kurdish alienation from and opposition to the central political system while the clear manifestation of this has been the protracted war which began in 1961.

The range of governments which plagued Iraq during this period have, each according to its "ingenuity" embarked upon one policy or another in dealing with the Kurdish question. Yet in one way or another and in spite of the differing outlooks and orientations of those regimes, their policies with regard to the Kurds have converged on the belief that denial of Kurdish national rights and the use of force should form the cornerstone of that policy. While this policy can at best be characterized as hostile and discriminatory, the degree of that hostility and the scope of that discrimination have varied as regimes have come and gone.

However, with the coming of the Baath to power, first in 1963 and again in 1968, not only the fighting Peshmarga and Kurdish political forces, but the entire Kurdish community of Southern Kurdistan has become the victims of a politically racist and militarily non-discriminating and brutal campaign. As the following account of the sinister disappearance of 8000 Kurds will reveal, Kurdish resistance to the rule of the Baath is not only for the achievement of their rights but a struggle for their survival as a nation.

More than three years have passed since the drama of the Qushtapa camp, where 8,000 Kurds were rounded up at gun point from the re-settlement camp near Arbil and their fate has remained unknown ever since. The sinister nature of the operation itself; indifference on the part of world public opinion and the Kurds' own inability to act have all resulted in a conspiracy of silence by which the Iraqi Baathist regime's criminal act has remained concealed from the public eye.

Early in 1976 and following the 1975 Algiers agreement between the Shah of Iran and Iraq's Saddam Hussain, Iraqi authorities began a campaign of evacuation of Kurdish populations, among them Barzani Kurds from the Barzan and Mergasur districts in the Arbil province. They were deported to the south of Iraq and remained there until 1978. In spite of earlier promises that no retaliatory measures will be taken against them, Iraq seemed bent on exacting some kind of punishment from them. Tariq Aziz, then Minister of Information, stated in an interview with the Financial Times on July 14, 1975 that "They (the Kurds) committed a crime against the Iraqi people and Iraqi sovereignty and they must pay a political price".

In 1978 these deported Kurds were returned to what the Iraqi Government calls "modern villages" which in reality were no more than refugee camps built near and under constant surveillance of military garrisons. The Barzani deportees were obliged to settle in Qushtapa, a small town about three kilometers south of Arbil where the main road divides the camp into two main sections. In some ways the deportees saw a good omen in their return to Kurdistan from the deserts in the south, especially as the regime had helped each family in building its own house inside the camp. It should however be mentioned that these people had not been allowed to return to their own villages in the areas from which they had been originally deported in 1976. Some Barzani Kurds were also dispersed among the camps in Diyana, Harir, Sebira and Beherke while others lived in Arbil and Baghdad. Most of the Kurds in these camps were manual seasonal workers in construction, housing, road-building while others worked as porters, drivers and a very small minority as shopkeepers. Life continued in this manner for those camp-dwellers while events of the coming Islamic Revolution began to unfold until it culminated in the Iran-Iraq war in September 1980.

After the Haji Omran onslaught on July 22, 1983 by the Iranians and their advance as far as Derbend inside Iraqi Kurdistan, the Iraqi army suffered very heavy casualties as the Iranians entered Iraqi territory for the first time. President Saddam Hussain paid a visit to the front in the Rawanduz area to launch a counter-attack against Iran. Unable to dislodge the Iranians from their positions, Iraq claimed that the Kurdistan Democratic Party had helped the Iranians take Haji Omran. Admitting the Iranian advance on television, Saddam Hussain held Idris and Masoud Barzani and the KDP Politburo responsible for having led the Iranian army into Iraqi territory. However, not being capable in reaching those it had accused, Iraq unleashed its hatred and wrath on 8,000 Barzani Kurds living under its own protection. Saddam Hussain took revenge on those people to justify revenge.

On July 30th Iraqi forces surrounded the Qushtapa and Diyana camps and rounded up all men between the ages of 12 and 80. Some were blind, others mentally handicapped, yet they were all taken in large convoys of military trucks to Baghdad. Claiming that they were Iranian soldiers captured in Haji Omran, the Iraqi authorities paraded these Kurds through the streets of the capital. As they were later taken to Najaf and Karbala, the government tried to impress the Shi'a community of those cities by once again claiming those Kurds to be Iranian prisoners-of-war. Following this, they were taken to a camp near the Jordanian frontier.

The men who were rounded up from the camps were all Barzani Kurds. Others, including three sons of the late Kurdish leader Mustafa Barzani, were arrested and executed in September. Another influential figure who was also executed was Shaikh Othman, Barzani's cousin and a man who had sided with the government and on whom the Iraqis had been counting to mobilize the disaffected Barzanis.

Inside the camps, the families which were left behind had their water and electricity supplies cut off and they were all condemned to extreme deprivation. Since the disappearance of their men, no information as to their fate has reached the families. In Europe, international humanitarian organizations have been informed about these tragic events: The League of Red Cross, the Red Crescent Societies, Comité International de la Croix Rouge, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the International Commission of Jurists and the Amnesty International. Up to this date none of them have given any answer as to the fate of the missing. The annual report of the Amnesty International did not even mention the event.

Following the arrest and deportation of the 8,000 Barzani Kurds by the Iraqi authorities, six French experts working in Iraq were captured by the Kurdistan Democratic Party. It is rumoured that one of those captured had advised the KDP to use their capture as a pretext for communicating with the French government (which at the time was a major arms supplier to Iraq) with the aim of getting information about the missing Kurds. While contacts were being made between the French foreign office and the Kurds, letters from the Pope, Bruno Kriesky, leaders of the French Socialist and French Communist Parties were sent to the KDP asking the release of the six French experts. It seems that the Kurds were out-maneuvered by the French Government when the KDP released the experts without having received any specific information on the fate of the missing Kurds.

While it is being said as a fulfilment of its promise to the KDP - a promise which had been communicated at the time through the Papal representative and the French Ambassador- the French government had actually sent an official representative (a retired general who is said to have known the late Mulla Mustafa Barzani) to Baghdad to seek clarification from the Iraqi government as to the fate of the 8,000. However, no sooner had this representative arrived Baghdad that he was ordered, no doubt under Iraqi protestation, to return to France without making any official contacts with the Iraqi authorities.

Another source which has tried to seek information on the issue is that of the Kurds themselves. Shaikh Muhammad Khalid, son of Shaikh Ahmad Barzani is said to have told those close to him that during the negotiations between the Kurdistan Democratic Party and the Patriotic Union of Kurdistan which led to their recent agreement, the PUK leader Jalal Talabani had been asked whether he had any information on the 8,000 missing Kurds. Talabani is said to have told the KDP leaders that when he met Saddam Hussain during their aborted negotiations last year, he did ask Saddam on this issue and the latter returned by saying why should someone like Talabani be concerned about the Barzanis, a people with whom he is in dispute. Talabani is said to have replied that they are Kurds and that he has the right to enquire about them. At this point Saddam Hussain told Talabani that they (the government) moved the Barzanis fearing that they may join the opposition and their brethren who have taken up arms against the government. Saddam also told him that later it was discovered that 34 of them had contacts with the rebels and they were executed, as were another 62 "traitors" among them. As for the rest, Saddam is said to have told him that some of them were sent to Tikrit where they are working in the textile and other factories and those remained were sent to the Rutba area where they were settled in tents close to the Iraq-Jordan border.

Another source says that when the PUK leader Talabani asked Saddam Hussain, the latter is said to have replied that the issue raised by Talabani should be made part of their on-going negotiations. Apparently since those negotiations did not amount to any agreement, the issue of the missing Kurds did not come up again.

What happened at the Qushtapa camp on 30th July 1983 corroborates the following:

1. The victims of this crime are defenceless civilian Kurds under the control and constant surveillance of the security and military authorities of the Iraqi government and were settled in camps chosen particularly for those purposes. Therefore by no stretch of imagination could those people be held accountable for military setbacks suffered by the Iraqi army on a battlefield away from the camps where those Kurds were settled.

2. The Iraqi Bathist government of Saddam Hussain has abandoned all pretensions of solving the Kurdish problem by means other than a policy of forced assimilation and terror. Statements made by Saddam Hussain and other Iraqi officials with regard to the fate of the missing Kurds, underline the fact that the Iraqi regime while being driven by fear of and blind hatred towards the Barzani leadership in the mountains did not hesitate from reeking its vengeance upon defenceless Barzanis under its hold. Such an attitude confirms the fact that Iraq's political system under the Ba'th advocates nothing short of systematic discriminatory and racist policies for the entire population of Kurds in Southern Kurdistan. The consequences of such policies, as this case indicates, are often of genocidal proportion.

3. This act by the Iraqi Ba'th government, which is not totally unknown to the world public opinion, has elicited no interest or concern outside the Kurdish community itself. The international community must therefore feel nothing but guilt and shame for its silence about and hence its acquiescence in the perpetration of this crime by one of its members. Furthermore, this conspiracy of silence reveals the hypocrisy of all powers, super or not so super who seek comfort and false dignity in their signing of anti-terrorist treaties, the Helsinki agreement and the Declaration of Human Rights, while on the other hand they prop up "allies" and bestow arms and legitimacy on "clients" such as the regime in Baghdad.

We therefore propose that this issue should be thoroughly investigated by a high - powered international commission composed of leading personalities from the public and human rights sectors. It is also hoped that this international commission will endorse the view that this tragedy merits an on-the-spot investigation and would therefore appoint at some stage a team of neutral observers to carry out this task.

The sinister disappearance of eight thousand defenceless human beings merits more than the disclosure of its gruesome details in a report.

We Kurds in the struggle for our survival as a nation, cannot afford to stand idle in the face of such crimes. Armed by our resolution and supported by friends, men and women of good will and humanity, we must endeavour to get to the roots of this tragedy.

Your support and participation is needed.

Appendix

Following is the testimony of one of the escaped Kurds from the Qushtapa camp.

" From 22-29 July 1983, we could tell from the passing of long lines of military trucks, armoured vehicles and fighter planes towards the north, that unusual events were taking place. From Teheran radio we knew that Haji Omran had been occupied. From the movement of trucks in the middle of the night towards Kirkuk, we imagined that Iraqi losses were heavy. We, the inhabitants of the Qushtapa camp had no reason to fear, simply because we were civilians who had not acted against the regime. Some of our young men had been taken to be trained in government military camps, and the rest of us were preoccupied with our daily work to support our families. We did not expect any mass retaliation for what was happening in Haji Omran. We thought if the government wanted to imprison some of us it will call us to Arbil; in other words, we did not think that the Iraqi-Ba'th army would attain such a degree of inhumanity to commit such atrocities against our families, so no precautions had been taken".

" On July 30th my wife woke up as usual at four o'clock in the morning for the morning prayer and to prepare breakfast for us. On that morning I was awakened by my wife shaking me vigorously. She looked horrified and said: 'our camp is encircled by the Iraqi soldiers, we are inside a ring of armoured vehicles.' I did not believe what she said, but when I looked out of the door, I was convinced. Instinctively my eyes searched for an escape route, but escape was impossible. Ba'th soldiers were in full control and ready to open fire. Then from all sides the soldiers came down into the camp, firing their guns with much hatred like hungry wolves. They attacked houses, kicked down doors with their boots, swearing angrily at the Kurds. They awakened women and children, who opened their eyes to the horror taking place inside their homes. Most of them did not understand what was going on. Cries of the women and children of a camp of twenty thousand inhabitants were mixed with the shouts and insults of the Ba'th soldiers, beating and kicking them. For the inhabitants of our camp it was doomsday."

"I went into the toilet area to hide myself behind a door. I was praying to God to save me from the soldiers. They came into the toilet area many times, and one of them even looked into the part where I was hiding, but he didn't see me behind the door. My heart was beating wildly: there I was listening to the sounds of the tragedy which was unfolding, a tragedy caused by those who pretend to be brothers of the Kurds. Angry images passed through my mind about the decision in March 1975 which put an end to our struggle against this infernal regime. That decision is the source of all our misfortune. In my mind I was telling myself: By this decision to lay down arms, those in charge of the KDP prevented us from having the pleasure of dying in defense of our homeland. It would have been a million times better for all of us, including our women and children to be killed at the front than to become slaves of the inhuman Ba'th regime and witness such black days."

The escaped Barzani of the Qushtapa camp went on with his tragic story saying: 'I knew later that all those who were found in hiding places were savagely beaten by the Iraqi soldiers. Fatim Muhammad, age 68 and mother of Zero tried to stop a group of soldiers from beating her son . She took the Koran and faced the soldiers saying in Kurdish: ' If you are believers in God and his prophet I beg you in the name of this Koran to stop beating my son' . One soldier turned around and kicked her; she fell down in faint. There are other unimaginable examples of cruelty carried out by the Ba'th army in Qushtapa and Diyana camps. By about 11:30 a.m . there were no men left in the camps between the ages of 12 and 80. Only a very few were fortunate enough not to be found in their hideouts in ovens, barrels, etc. During the night, I came out wearing my traditional Kurdish clothes and set out towards the mountains. It took me four days of walking to get here.

The following is a partial list of the names of those who are missing. Have they been jailed, tortured massacred or are they still alive?
